TAKE DEAD 2,500; FIND 800 BODIES

PORT LONDON, May 7.—With the arrival of new details today the horror of the Carrage, earthquake, down. With more than six hundred bodies recovered from the ruins there, a conservative estimate of the number of dead in the quake zone today placed the total at more than twenty-five hundred. In the entire zone of Carrage, of 12,000 inhabitants, not a building is standing whole.

Bright shocks today increased the terror of the inhabitants. Several parties of rescuers have been trapped or killed by falling walls along the first great shock.

The receipt of news that the United States would send aid, having already runched $5,000,000 in the Red Cross, was greeted with rejoicing.

San Jose is unable to care for the injured. The Red Cross has thrown up, on the outskirts of Carrage, several hospitals, but not enough to go around and the houses are in ruins. In primitive methods of carrying the injured to the hospitals.

PROCLAIMING A KING

GEORGE V. TAKES THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE IN PARLIAMENT

Both Houses of Parliament in Extraordinary Session as New King Takes Oath—Feeling That Edward's Death May Precipitate General Upheaval.

LONDON, May 7.—The sudden death of King Edward, followed by the accession to the throne of George V., to-day, has brought about a fear among many of the members of the House of Commons that they are face to face with a great crisis in the government of Great Britain.

It is believed that the dispute over the budget will precipitate the trouble, and that it may reach further than the domain of the new King. The known Tory proclivities of King George are feared.

The gravity of the situation was shown by the convening of both Houses of Parliament to-day, although it had been planned to have these meetings postponed.

A series of conferences were held to-day by members of the House of Commons, after which it was decided to convene the body in spite of the absence of the national leaders. As members of the two bodies began to gather minute guns were fired at James Park. The Commons sat only a short time, after which Winston Churchill moved the adjournment, which was carried.

The House of Lords assembled with about fifty peers present, all the bishops being among the absentees. The Lord Chancellor read prayers and then took the oath of allegiance to King George and signed the roll. The other peers followed him in the ceremony.

Unofficial announcement was made to-day that King Edward's funeral probably will take place on May 17.

The proclamation of George V., as King was delivered from the steps of the Royal Exchange and from the steps of St. James's Palace.

Following this proclamation the oath of office was administered. Standing before the dignitaries of the realm the "Sailor Prince" took the oath that establishes him as the successor to the throne of his father, Edward VII., who died at 11:45 last night.

Commands Officials to Do Duty.

The new King then issued his initial proclamation. It simply directed all of the officials of the government to do their duty.

The ceremony before the Privy Council of the oath taking was the same as has marked the accession of a new monarch for a century. It was the last formal action of the new monarch except that of coronation.

The new King rode from Marlborough House to St. James's Palace for the final ceremony through silent throngs of mourners.

The body of the dead King lay in the death chamber on the top floor of Buckingham Palace. The deep tones of the giant bell on St. Paul's Cathedral tolled out to the mourning city the story of the death of their monarch. All through the day the bell boomed out its mournful peal.

Trumpets Proclaim New Ruler.

At 1 o'clock this afternoon a special post, under the command of the King with a great band of trumpets and playing of proclamations.

The proclamation of King George V. was performed by the gunpowder corps, which fired a salute of 101 guns. The ceremony in St. James's Palace was unattended by picturesque, however.

KING EDWARD MURDERED MAGIC? ACCEPTED AS WORKING DIPLOMATIST

William T. Stead Declares He Was a King Among Statesmen and a Statesman Among Kings.

By WILLIAM T. STEAD.
Special Cable to the Boston American.

LONDON, May 7.—It was once said by a French observer that "while Edward VII. was a King among statesmen and a statesman among kings." It was a happy phrase which expressed the difference between the two sides of King William and without the empire. He had been a constitutional King, but he had been a statesman among kings. It was a happy phrase which expressed the difference between the two sides of King William and without the empire. He had been a constitutional King, but he had been a statesman among kings.

It is a very short space of time he acquired reputation as a diplomatist that was as unique as it was exceptional. The reputation was not ill deserved, but it was not in his nature. His real merit was in his nature. His real merit was in his nature. His real merit was in his nature.

Promoted Good Understanding. The language exaggerated conception of what he had accomplished or could accomplish was not without some basis of attainment to the King, who, however, was not ill-disposed to find his life a life of good understanding between his subjects and those of his neighbors had been with as cordial as possible results.

It is possible he may have regarded with a certain misanthropic joy the extraordinary reception which was accorded to "Old Edward" among certain sections of the German people by whom he was regarded as a kind of black magician who had won the hearts of the German people by his charm and his charm.

Buchanan's Praise. According to all accounts he could not have done it better. It indeed so well, if he had been a man of thirty-three. He made such little speeches, shared with all the better, performed all royal routines, listened attentively to speeches, and he was not ill-disposed to find his life a life of good understanding between his subjects and those of his neighbors had been with as cordial as possible results.

THE FUNERAL PURPLE OF KINGSHIP

Like the surge of an unusual tide out of the depths of the Old-World life, a great emotion from England sweeps over the United States.

The King is dead.

Whether of British or Germanic stock, Celtic, Slav or Latin—Americans have in their blood the memory of ancient, but repudiated, kingship. Our forefathers, near or remote, were all liegemen of Kings.

But that is past. And when we echo the cry, "The King is dead!" the accent is as of words uttered in a play. The living passion has gone out of them.

It is only by the exercise of imagination and a wide human sympathy that we can understand the feeling of our British neighbors across the northern frontier, or over the sea.

Of old the King was a superman. His blood was consecrated blood. His right was grounded in the mystery of birth. He could do no wrong. America arose to rebuke this kind of authority, and to declare it illegitimate.

America is determined that heredity shall not rule—that the highest places shall be held, not by those who are born to greatness, but by those who achieve it.

The back-fire from the United States has burned over all the jungles of European feudalism. And kingship in Europe is not what it once was. Still the sentiment of the old hereditary dies hard—and to-day the British peoples are in unfeigned mourning.

The heart of America is touched.

Edward was careless and irresponsible in his youth and middle age. His morality was that of the superman, who despises the ethics of the people.

But when Victoria died and the Crown settled upon Edward's head, he sobered himself to his task. He became responsible and kind.

He won respect and affection everywhere. And his influence has been steady to the world's order and peace.

At home he was the friend and counselor of all parties. And upon his unique social prestige rested much of the hope that England would make its way in safety through the welter of political contradictions in which it is involved.

For the power of the British Kingship is mainly social. It is potent in politics, because it stands aloof from politics.

The succession of George V. is accomplished in the midst of the graves: misgivings and omens of alarm.

His personal unfitness is matter of common knowledge.

His coming to the throne is a fresh demonstration of the impracticability of the hereditary principle. It shouts aloud the truth that men are not made great by birth.

It may be, indeed, that the new King will be born again by coronation, as his father seemed to be. But the faults of the son are not of the flesh, but of the spirit. And they are less remediable than his father's were.

George V. has a vanity and egotism that may run easily to the arrogance that topples thrones into the dust.

This is a bad day for conceited Kings. And there are qualities in this new King George that recall that elder George, against whose folly the world-resounding shot was fired at Concord Bridge.

Edward was the guardian of a democratizing monarchy.

At home he was a King among statesmen; in his travels abroad through Europe he was a statesman among Kings.

The new King is stavistic—a back-throw to a monarchism of pale ghosts and dead memories.

Great Britain has lost a republican King. She may gain a republican Constitution.

The Moral Effects of Endowments

Whatever may have been the particular merits of this protest, it has served to call attention to the fact that endowments do indeed have powerful psychological effects—effects that may sometimes be morally disastrous.

The Carnegie Foundation devotes a huge capital sum to the augmenting of the salaries of college professors. It discriminates. It subsidizes the teachers in institutions that are conducted in a certain spirit or under certain auspices, and refuses help to other institutions.

Obviously the practical effect of this discrimination must in the long run tend to the suppression of the kind of teaching that Mr. Carnegie and his trustees do not like.

With the best intentions in the world, the man who sets up and perpetuates a great endowment may in this way do incalculable harm. For the only valid teaching is the kind that justifies itself to the living intelligence of men—and that pays its own keep.

The endowed teaching institution taxes the people—to pay perpetual interest on its invested funds—and then very likely gives them doctrine that they don't want. They take it because it is offered—to individuals—at a bargain.

The American public school—supported by obvious annual taxation upon the neighborhood—promises to furnish the most authentic teaching agency that has ever been known.

And much is to be said for the modern newspaper as an instrument of education—because it lives by a daily plebiscite of its readers, and cannot live otherwise.

As with endowed teaching institutions, so it is with endowed institutions of charity. They may be of great use in the beginning. And they may continue to be so—if kept close enough to the working world. But they have a powerful tendency to misrepresent and misdirect the real benevolent impulses of the people.
